Superintendent's Message

Dear Colleagues,

There is no better way to prepare the next generation of educators than in classrooms, as faculty, under the mentorship of veteran educators. In light of that vision, BESE made adjustments to the design of teacher preparation programs earlier this fall. Henceforth, programs will have curricula grounded in specific skills (see page 34) teachers need to be successful in the classroom and will include yearlong residencies, under the leadership of mentor educators.

Already, this shift is gaining the attention of media outlets and teachers alike. Testimonials from Louisiana educators in support of the shift have recently been published in the Baton Rouge Advocate, the Monroe News-Star, and Education Week.

Schools, school systems, and the state now turn their attention toward scaling the Believe and Prepare model into full, statewide implementation. As a start, every college of education in the state has applied for initial grant funds committed by BESE to fund mentor educators, resident teachers, and the coordination of residencies. Awards will be made in December and January.

At the same time, BESE staff, Board of Regents (BoR) staff, and Department staff are working to develop a system of quality measurement and reporting for the state's preparation programs. It is critical that both undergraduate programs, and programs certifying teachers while on the job, be held to comparable standards and measured in a common way. In developing this system of measurement and reporting, the agencies will be consulting with their respective boards, deans of the colleges of education, heads of other preparation programs, and experts across the state and country. BESE and BoR will consider policy recommendations this spring.

This type of systemic change necessitates a gradual and methodical process. There must be years of training for mentor educators. We must create every incentive for aspiring professionals to become aspiring educators. Programs of all types must be held to equal expectations, and they must have time to make these significant shifts. If we pay heed to these needs, and if we stick with the process, we will achieve a long sought and momentous accomplishment: the systemic professionalization of the most noble of careers.

As always, thank you for all you do for our children,

John
