The Epidemic in New Spain
From Historia general de las cosas de Nueva España, c. 1575–1580
by Bernardino de Sahagún, Franciscan friar

An epidemic broke out, a sickness of pustules\(^1\). It began in the month of Tepeihuitl. Large bumps spread on people; some were entirely covered. The victims could no longer walk about, but lay in their dwellings and sleeping places. When they made a motion, they called out loudly. The pustules that covered people caused great desolation\(^2\); very many people died of them, and many just starved to death; starvation reigned, and no one took care of others any longer.

\(^1\) pustules: blisters
\(^2\) desolation: suffering
Item 1: Multiple Select

As shown in Source 2, many crops were shared between Native Americans and Europeans during the Columbian Exchange. Which effects did these American crops have on Europeans?

Select the two correct answers.

<tbody>
<tr>
<td>2</td>
<td>Student’s response correctly identifies two resources that were found in the British colonies and correctly explains why each resource was in high demand in Europe.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
| 1        | Student’s response correctly identifies one resource that was found in the British colonies and correctly explains why this resource was in high demand in Europe.
OR
Student’s response correctly identifies two resources that were found in the British colonies, but does not explain why each resource was in high demand in Europe. |
| 0        | Student’s response does not identify a resource that was found in the British colonies and does not explain why it was in high demand in Europe. |

Scoring Notes:

Resources found in the British colonies:
- large supply of timber
- large supply of fur-bearing animals
- large supply of farmland
- oceans with a large supply of fish

Reasons these resources were in high demand in Europe:
- Timber was in demand in Europe for the construction of buildings and ships.
- Fur-bearing animals were in demand in Europe for making clothing and hats for wealthy people.
- Farmland was used to grow crops such as tobacco and potatoes, which became popular in Europe and were in high demand.
- Oceans had a large supply of fish, which enabled the colonists to export dried fish to Europe as a food source.
- Accept other reasonable responses.
